☐ Read the memo: The Internet is for Everyone

"The Internet is for Everyone" is a memo written by Vint Cerf as a plea to the the people who write and define standards to make sure the way the Internet is engineered maintains the philosophy that the Internet should be available and useable by everyone in the world, regardless of race, gender, creed, location, or wealth.

Clearly, Vint Cerf thought that the prospect of "The Internet is for Everyone" might be threatened in early 2002, shortly after the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001. In the memo, he lays out the state of the Internet and its usage in 2002, predicts the future, and then presents a series of nine challenges or threats to the idea that the Internet is for everyone. The last several paragraphs begin with the phrase: "Internet is for everyone - but it won't be if…
